

mashable.com

Now there's a Porsche superyacht because regular yachts are for suckers

Gianluca Mezzofiore

5-7 минут

There's a whole world of luxury carmakers who also design superyachts out there, a world you rarely see because, well, you probably aren't loaded enough to afford one. As simple as that.

SEE ALSO: 377-Foot Migaloo Submarine Yacht Is Perfect for James Bond Villains

But that didn't stop you from admiring the 20-metre Niniette 66 from Bugatti, which came out in March this year. And — we bet — that won't prevent you from checking out with awe the new GTT 115, a superyacht which is the product of a collaboration between Dynamiq and Studio F.A. Porsche.

Behold.

Image: dynamiq

Now, I know virtually nothing about Porsches and even less about luxury boats, but what immediately pops to my eye about this 35-metre vessel is its sleek, futuristic design.

Launched in Viareggio, Italy, the GTT 115 is defined as "the modern gentlemen's superyacht" by Sergei Dobroserdov, CEO of Dynamiq, and we gotta admit it looks pretty cool in its "Rhodium Grey metallic paint."

Image: f.a. porsche/dynamiq

GTT 115 seems to blend performance and efficiency really well, as it can sail at over 21 knots maximum with a cruising range of 3,400 nautical miles.

We probably have to thank Porsche for the boat's very German minimalist, elegant concept. As acknowledged by the

Monaco-based company, the yacht has a very peculiar design: "its fluid lines, side contours and balanced proportions recall the drop-shaped, overstretched surfaces of the Porsche 911."

There are echoes everywhere, even in the smallest details, such as the boat's cleat (where you tie a knot) mirroring the car's taillight or the frame of the sun shade sharing similarities to lines of the sports car.

Here it is if you want to make a comparison:

Image: AP/REX/Shutterstock

Even the yacht's interior cites the automobile design:

"The rooms are visually connected by decorative aluminium and wooden slats, inspired by the dashboard of the Porsche Mission E. Brown, and cream leather dominates the colours and materials, along with alcantara fabric and indirect LED lighting, as is common in car headliners."

It's basically a Porsche on water.

Image: F.A. Porsche

Image: F.A. Porsche

There are only 7 units available so hurry up if you want go get one! It comes at a listed price of just €13,950,000 ($16,720,000).

Sign up for Mashable Newsletters to get personalized updates on top stories and viral hits.

Image: Samsung

By Nicole Cammorata Mashable Deals 2017-10-10

10:30:00 UTC

Just to let you know, if you buy something featured here, Mashable might earn an affiliate commission.

Samsung has just released a pair of limited edition Star Wars POWERbot™ vacuums that pay homage to the iconic franchise in a pretty awesome way. Available for pre-order starting Oct. 10, these Darth Vader and Stormtrooper robotic vacuums are poised to be the next coveted item for any Star Wars super fan. (The vacuums will officially ship in early November but you can buy one right now.)

The best part about these vacuums? They play music and talk, using key Star Wars phrases and sound effects. Check it out:

There's been a novelty factor to robot vacuums like the POWERbot™ for the last few years, but with each model that's released we are propelled into a future where it's less about having "the cool new thing" and more about making our lives better through technology. That's definitely true of the Samsung POWERbot™. That said, they are also 100 percent "the cool new thing."

These are still the same powerful vacuums as the VR7000, except with the added Star Wars design. The POWERbot™ VR7000 won the 2017 CES Innovation Award, and for good reason. It's chock full of features, like a suction power capacity of 10 watts and a 290mm-wide brush — that's 42 percent larger than conventional 204mm brushes.

The vacuum includes CycloneForce technology, which produces a centrifugal force that helps to circulate dust particles through an inner chamber while dirt and debris are sent to an outer chamber. The result is a bagless filter that stays cleaner for longer and helps to prevent clogging — and is easy to clean.

Image: SAMSUNG

A sensor on the top of the vacuum scans the room and then maps out the space to calculate the most efficient path, plus when it gets low on battery it automatically goes back to the docking station and can pick up where it left off later.

From a visual standpoint, there is a subtle artistry to the way these vacuums have been designed. Both versions feature a glossy finish and play up the fact that the shape mimics the helmets worn by Darth Vader and the Stormtroopers. If it wasn't a vacuum, it could almost pass for a kind of semi-abstract art piece.

In addition to the music, both editions have a string of catch phrases and other audio you'll hear while they go about their business. For example, when the Darth Vader model is powered on, it makes a lightsaber sound. When the Stormtrooper starts to clean it says, "Let's go." The best part though is by far Darth's seemingly random heavy breathing.

What makes this iteration of the POWERbot™ even cooler though — and worth the \$699-\$799 price tag — is that these vacuums are truly designed for people who love Star Wars. So yes, in fact, these are the droids you're looking for. (You had to know that was coming, right?)